The frame of a motor vehicle is usually made of metal sheets and is structured so that all the chassis parts can be fixed to it. At the same time it is important that the chassis parts be retained at particular positions on the frame. In motor vehicles of a high structural class it is known to provide the chassis with a so-called motor support. This is a superstructure which is joined to the chassis and can be used to receive the vehicle's drive unit. At the same time it can also be used to receive the air-conditioning system and as part of the steering column. European Patent No. 0 804 612 B1 describes an apparatus which serves the above-mentioned purpose, having a motor support with an upper part which is integrated in a support plate. The support plate is fixed at one end of the chassis by means of a welded joint, and is fixed at the other end of the chassis in a corresponding manner by means of a one-piece hinge which is welded to the top of the support plate. The motor support rests in an upwardly open recess of the support plate and is fixed at its bottom via elastic elements to the frame. It is an object of the invention to provide an apparatus for retaining the chassis of a motor vehicle which permits easy assembly. According to the invention, this is achieved by providing an apparatus for retaining the chassis of a motor vehicle. The chassis has a frame and a retaining apparatus fixed to the frame for retaining chassis parts against displacement from the frame. At least two retaining apparatus parts are arranged spaced from one another in a plane parallel to the frame, and the frame is provided at least in sections on its one side, parallel to the plane, with means for supporting the at least two retaining apparatus parts.
